Native Trails Earns 2018 GREEN GOOD Design Award

Santorini bathtub recognized as “outstanding example of Green Design”

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (April 23, 2018) – Native Trails announced today it has received a 2018 GREEN GOOD Design Award for its freestanding Santorini bathtub. This is the fifth year the company has been selected as a winner in the annual competition, which is sponsored by The European Centre for Architecture Art Design and Urban Studies and The Chicago Athenaeum: Museum of Architecture and Design.

“The Santorini has really been a passion project for our company,” said Native Trails CEO Naomi Neilson. “The design showcases the fact that an evocative shape and design-forward fixture can also be sustainable. This handcrafted piece is forged from recycled copper by artisans in Mexico who have become part of our Native Trails family. We’re proud to be a recipient of this award, and in the company of others who put the green in good design.”

GREEN GOOD Design identifies the world’s most important examples of sustainable design and develops public awareness about which global companies are doing the best job towards ecological and sustainable design for our world environments. This year, hundreds of submissions from around the world were reviewed by members of The European Centre’s International Advisory Committee in the categories of products, programs, people, environmental planning and architecture.

Native Trails’ winning design:

Santorini

Artisan-crafted and forged of high-quality recycled copper, Santorini pays homage to the copper bathtub’s European heritage and tells the story of generations of Mexican artisanship. Through thousands of hammer strikes and over the course of several weeks, the work of Native Trails’ master coppersmiths reflects centuries of craft techniques that have been passed down and continually refined. Santorini is available in three finishes: Antique, Polished Copper and Brushed Nickel, which sheaths the tub’s hammered copper body.
