Native Trails

Founded in 1996 by Naomi Neilson, Native Trails is built on a foundation of bringing the work of undiscovered artisans from Central Mexico to North America. Combining classic craftsmanship traditions with contemporary design and sustainable materials, Neilson first turned heads with Native Trails' iconic hand-hammered recycled copper sinks in line with the material's resurgence we see today. The company now also specializes in concrete sinks and bathtubs, bath vanities made of reclaimed wood and metals, a range of home décor products, and handspun Italian glass sinks.

1. Long revered as some of the finest in the world, Murano glass is a new material for Native Trails and exemplifies how the brand employs age-old artisan techniques to produce modern products.

2+3+4. The colors and patterns of the Murano collection are created during the molding and spinning process, and each glass vessel sink is expertly handformed to ensure that it is unique.

5. The asymmetrical shell-shaped bowl and the sink's ribbed exterior are achieved through the molding process—making the piece the focal point of the space.

6. The Murano collection consists of five designs that feature vibrant finishes, warm tones, and bold accents inspired by views of the Italian coastline.
